American Horticultural Society Honors Phipps' Executive Director with Professional Award

Phipps Conservatory and Botanical Gardens executive director Richard Piacentini has been named the 2011 recipient of the American Horticultural Society's Professional Award. The award is one of twelve Great American Gardeners Awards that the AHS presents annually to individuals, organizations, and businesses that represent the best in American gardening. Each of the recipients has contributed significantly to fields such as scientific research, garden communication, landscape design, youth gardening, teaching, and conservation. The Professional Award is given to a public garden administrator whose achievements during the course of his or her career have cultivated widespread interest in horticulture.

Executive director of Phipps since 1994, Richard Piacentini has led the institution's transformation into a model of green building practices and environmental awareness. Since breaking ground on the first LEED® certified visitor center at a United States public garden in 2003, Phipps has endeavored to "green" all of its gardens, displays, programs, and operations. Most recently, construction began on the Center for Sustainable Landscapes, which will comply with the world's highest green building standards. Piacentini has also served as president and treasurer of the American Public Gardens Association, executive director of the Leila Arboretum Society in Michigan, as executive director of the Rhododendron Species Foundation in Washington, and assisted in the development of the Pacific Rim Bonsai Collection.

On Thurs., June 9, 2011, the AHS will honor Piacentini and the other 2011 award recipients during the Great American Gardeners Awards Ceremony and Banquet, held at the Society's headquarters at River Farm in Alexandria, Virginia.
