Handheld Health on the Rise

Phipps Conservatory utilizes mobile technology to foster “handheld health.”

Pittsburgh, Pa. — Whether checking emails, Facetiming friends or posting pictures to social media, adults and kids alike are immersed in mobile technology every single day. While the myriad activities available on handheld devices make it easy to slip into a sedentary lifestyle, the Let’s Move Pittsburgh program at Phipps Conservatory and Botanical Gardens is harnessing the power of mobile technology to bring healthy tips and tricks right to your fingertips.

If you become confused while deciphering nutrition facts on items in the grocery store, and you can’t decide if they’re healthy choices for you and your family, there’s an app for that! Let’s Move Pittsburgh’s Green Light Foods is a free mobile app allowing you to scan barcodes on packaged foods and beverages. The app then shows you the item’s nutritional profile in the form of easy-to-read red, yellow or green lights. Users also have access to the app’s healthy tips and links to useful resources, so that even the busiest families will stay on a happy, healthy track.

What if — instead of having to research health and wellness tips on your own — the tips could be sent right to you? Now, with the 5-2-1-0 Texting Program, they can! By texting LETSMOVEPGH to 41411, subscribers will receive two text messages per week containing helpful tips from medical professionals. These tips make it easier than ever to adopt the 5-2-1-0 lifestyle, which represents 5 or more servings of fruits and vegetables, 2 hours or less of recreational screen time, 1 hour or more of physical activity, and 0 sugary drinks and more water every day.

Green Light Foods, which was developed in collaboration with Carnegie Mellon University and Wahila Creative, is available for download on both Google Play and the App Store.
